

Evangelia Tastsoglou, Ph.D., born in Piraeus, Greece, is Professor and Chair in the Department of Sociology and Criminology, Saint Mary's University, Halifax and the co-leader of the “Gender / Immigrant Women” research domain in the Atlantic Metropolis Centre of Excellence (AMA) for research on migration and diversity (<http://husky1.stmarys.ca/~etastsoglou1/>). Her publications are in the areas of gender and international migration; Greek migration and global diaspora; migration and globalization; Canadian immigration; (im)migrant and minority women and citizenship; gender, migration and security; intersections of ethnicity / race, gender and class; multiculturalism and anti-racism; gender and diasporas. Publications include numerous articles in Canadian and international journals, book chapters, research reports and two books on Women, Migration and Citizenship: Making Local, National and Transnational Connections (Ashgate Publishers, 2006, co-edited with Alexandra Dobrowolsky) and Gender and International Migration: Focus on Greece, special volume of the Greek Review of Social Research (E.K.K.E., Athens, 2003, co-edited with Laura Maratou-Alipranti). She has recently completed, as principal investigator, a 3-year university – community collaborative project, on Security and Immigration, Changes and Challenges: Immigrant and Ethnic Communities in Atlantic Canada, Presumed Guilty? (Ottawa, SWC / Canadian Heritage, 2007; http://atlantic.metropolis.net/ResearchPolicy/index_e.html). Her forthcoming book on Women, Gender and Diasporas: Labour, Community and Identity in the Greek Diaspora, focuses on gender and Greek diasporic communities globally (Lexington Press, 2008).